

Amara Bangura is a Sierra Leonean radio journalist working as BBC Media Action's Production Manager. He started working in journalism in 2002 as a volunteer at a small community radio station in northern Sierra Leone which provided a critical voice in the aftermath of Sierra Leone's civil war. After gaining experience in both news and program production, he worked with BBC Media Action as a trainer to help rural journalists report on the 2007 general elections. In 2008, he worked with trainers from Journalists for Human Rights, ultimately joining JHR's fellowship program where he produced stories addressing human rights issues in the country. Amara won an award for human rights reporting for a story on neglected mental health cases in Sierra Leone. In 2009, BBC Media Action hired him to produce Hague Link, a program that covered the trial of the convicted former Liberian president Charles Taylor at the International Criminal Court, where he reported for both national and international broadcast. In 2010, he returned to Sierra Leone to work with BBC Media Action on two national governance-focused programs supervising all productions. He is currently on the Gordon N. Fisher/JHR William Southam Journalism Fellowship at Massey College, University of Toronto.

Alison Crawford is a national reporter in CBC's parliamentary bureau. She covers the RCMP, justice, public safety, the Supreme Court and the Liberal Party of Canada. Alison started her journalism career in 1996 as an associate producer in Ottawa before moving to Fredericton to work as a reporter covering city hall and the New Brunswick legislature. Her next assignment was Calgary and then Winnipeg where she worked on the CBC investigative unit. Over the years, Alison's investigative reports and feature writing have been recognized by Journalists for Human Rights, the Canadian Association of Journalists, New York Festivals, Association of Electronic Journalists and Academy of Canadian Cinema & Television.